Update 12/5/19: Decided that Costa's Hummingbird that was originally on here was an Anna's and corrected the record.

Original report:

The big news is that we saw a Red-naped Sapsucker on the sapsucker tree in Tournament Park. It has been quite a while since we've seen one. I think the last time was when Viveca and I saw both the red-naped and the red-breasted on that same tree just before she left for a trip to South America. That was also in the Fall. We also saw the Costa's Hummingbird again and Viveca was onboard with the call. I also took Travis over there later in the day and he was convinced too. It's possible we are wrong, but if so, that is one very different-looking Anna's from the norm.
